WITH SHACKLETON IN THE ANTARCTIC.

ON ELEPHANT ISLAND.

The party lived at this inhospitable spot on Elephant Island until Sir Ernest Shackleton reached them after they were driven out of the ice hole. The pack ice is seen closing the bay, while in the background are the glaciers from which avalanches come down the mountains. To fill the bay and to the west as created to destroy the explorers of the spot is the foreground members of the expedition are seen standing the SE wind gusts which formed their principal food for 4 1/2 months.

SAVED AT LAST.

He came on Elephant Island when on August 30, 1916, at the fourth attempt, Sir Ernest Shackleton succeeded in reaching the island and getting off the 22 men whom he had left there when he set off on his wonderful journey of 700 miles to South Georgia in a life boat to get help. The party had been 4 1/2 months on the island and practically all the food had subsided on the penguins and seals they caught, largely, and realized desperate hunger.
